The 993 Tip badly needs another gear. In terms of the driving experience it is down to personal taste with most people preferring the manual. A well driven manual is probably faster than a well driven Tip, and a badly driven Tip will be faster than a badly driven manual. Once you are pushing on there is little difference.

Hi Peter. Thanks for the insight. I have changed the title of the thread to correctly reflect where I wanted the thread to focus. Before I bought my car I drove a couple of Manual C4's and found the clutch and location frankly torturous as I am not very tall (5'6") have short legs....and felt like I was driving a RHD with pedals on the left due to the floor pan design for 4WD.
